Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Patriot s Day Celebration at Cambridge, Mass;, April 19th, 1921: Also an Address on the True American Flag (our First National Emblem and Standard) The Cambridge Flag A new national flag. representing their hopes and aspirations. was to shape anew the destiny of mankind, and, in the light of what has since occurred, in the pages of history, the world is vastly better off, in every way, for the events of that date. For, under the providence of God, our flag today is now the Symbol of the power and glory of one hundred and ten millions of people. from every race and creed under the sun. Wherever it is unfurled, it represents our ideals of freedom and democracy, of government of the people. by the people, and for the people; and. since the late world war. it is now become the hope of all humanity. It was in this year 1775, immediately following the Battle of Lexington and Cambridge, that John Adams, of Massachusetts, practically nominated General George Washington of Virginia, Commander-in-Chief of the first American army, that had just begun to assemble here on Cambridge Common. Washington lost no time in reaching Cambridge Arriving here on July 2nd, on the following day he took command of his little army, under the Washington Elm. To reach an intelligent understanding regarding the needs of the new army, the Continental Congress. on September 30. 1775. appointed a committee of three members: Benjamin Franklin of Philadelphia. Thomas Lynch of South Carolina, Benjamin Harrison of Virginia, to proceed at once to Cambridge and then and there to confer with the Commander-in-Chief. The records of this Conference have been...
