Large-scale reconstruction assistance programs are being undertaken by the United States following the war with Iraq. To fund such programs, Congress approved on April 12, 2003, a 2.48 billion Iraq Relief and Reconstruction Fund (IRRF) in the FY2003 Supplemental Appropriation. On November 6, 2003, the President signed into law P. L. 108-106, the FY2004 Emergency Supplemental Appropriation, providing 18.4 billion for Iraq reconstruction. Contributions pledged at the October 24, 2003, Madrid donor conference by other donors amounted to roughly 3.6 billion in grant aid and as much as 13.3 billion in possible loans. On February 14, 2005, the President sent a supplemental appropriations request to Congress that would, among other items, provide an additional 5.7 billion for the training and equipping of Iraqi security forces. Funds would be controlled by the Secretary of Defense in a new Iraqi Security Forces Fund rather than provided through the State Department-managed IRRF, as is currently the case. The House approved the measure on March 16. On June 28, 2004, the entity implementing assistance programs, the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA),...
